Ruger's first pistol in this line was their LC9. This was introduced in 2011. It was hammer-fired, and although a solid offering, it did have a difficult trigger pull. As is their habit of listening to customers, Ruger went back to the design table.

Ruger LC9S Review [2020] - Armed Forces International

Ruger LC9 Functions. Ruger included a manual, frame-mounted thumb safety on the LC9 that blocks the firing pin and locks the slide in place—similar to the safety on a 1911. The trigger pull is a consistent and silky-smooth double-action pull, with no double-strike capability.

Ruger LC9s: DISCONTINUED - Florida Gun Supply "Get armed ...

Had to comment on the LC9 manual safety. I'm a lefty and one of the reasons that I bought my SR9c was the fact that it had an ambidextrous safety. Though the LC9 is a little big for pocket carry, I'd consider it for IWB carry if it weren't for the fact that it only has a safety on one side - there's no way I'd buy one unless Ruger offered it with the safety on BOTH sides.

The LC9 is a double-action-only, hammer-fired, locked-breech pistol with a smooth trigger pull. Control and confident handling of the Ruger LC9 are accomplished through reduced recoil and aggressive frame checkering for a positive grip in all conditions. The Ruger LC9 features smooth "melted" edges for ease of holstering, carrying and drawing.
