There are approximately 30 recognized orders of insects, but this number changes as entomologists discover, classify, and reclassify current species. All insects belong to the Kingdom Animalia, the Phylum Arthropoda, and the Class Insecta, which is then divided into orders. Most insect order names end in ptera, which comes from the Greek word pteron, meaning wing. While each group has similarities, there are features that make an insect order distinct from the other orders.
